it is largely accepted in the relevant literature that successful learning of one or more non native languages is affected by a number of factors that are independent of the target language s per se these factors include the age of acquisition (AoA) of the target language, the type and amount of formal instruction the learners have received, as well as the amount of language use that the learners demonstrate. Recent experimental evidence suggests that one crucial factor for efficient native-like performance in the non-native language is the amount of naturalistic exposure or immersion that the learners receive to that language. This can be broadly defined as the degree to which language learners use their non-native language outside the classroom and for their day-to-day activities, and usually presupposes that the learners live in an environment where their non-native language is exclusively or mostly used. Existing literature has suggested that linguistic immersion can be beneficial for lexical and semantic acquisition in a non-native language, as well as for non-native morphological and syntactic processing. More recent evidence has also suggested that naturalistic learning of a non-native language can also have an impact on the patterns of brain activity underlying language processing, as well as on the structure of brain regions that are involved, expressed as changes in the grey matter structure. This research topic brings together studies on the effects of learning and speaking a non-native language in a naturalistic environment. These include more efficient or native-like processing in behavioural tasks, tapping on language, lexicon, morphology, syntax, as well as changes in the brain structure and function as revealed by neuroimaging studies.

The beetle genus agrilus has over 3000 species, which makes it the most numerous in the animal kingdom. Many species are serious pests of plants with high invasive potential. Among them, the notoriously known agrilus planipennis invaded from Asia to North America, where it killed tens of millions of ash trees, caused regulatory agencies to enforce quarantines, and cost municipalities, property owners, nursery operators, and forest products industries tens of millions of dollars. The monograph provides a coherent, comprehensive, and critical review on all known host plants for more than 680 agrilus species. All host plants have assigned the confidence index from 0-3, based on the evaluated reliability, which eliminates false records. All original and subsequent references for particular plants are cited at each agrilus species. Data are organized from both insect and plant viewpoints. Results are analyzed and illustrated by graphs and diagrams. The main impact of the monograph is seen in entomology, phytopathology, forestry, agriculture, ecology, and biocontrol.
